

Courting Ely

Ronald W. Nelson, a Kansas-based attorney, presents "The Impact of Religion on Custody Cases" March 4 at the Postal Palace Convention Center to family court judges attending the 2010 Family Law Conference held in Ely. Justices from across the state are required to take 12 continuing judicial education credits per year, two of which are in ethics. "We come to Ely," says David Gordon, academic coordinator, judicial education unit at the Nevada Supreme Court, "because the State Bar Association holds its conference here, too. It's the rare judge who comes just for the judicial portion and who doesn't stay for the State Bar portion." Photo by Patrick Timothy Mullikin
